

The truth is, I don't think I can properly express my feelings in a letter. But for what it's worth I'll do my best.

Each time I entered the offices of Jaroslawicz & Jaros it resonated with: trust, comfort, and above all personal care. David and Abe are the roots of a friendly & caring environment, as the saying goes "you can tell a parent by its child"; everyone in this firm is friendly and caring. Any time I talked with any of the staff they would inquire about my health, they empathized with me, and were happy for me with every improvement.

I wouldn't trade such a personable experience, even if it meant getting more money. Though, I think all would agree that no other lawyer would have achieved such success. Especially when compared with similar cases - they couldn't be any more successful.

Watching Bradley Sacks' brilliant trial skills at work was just a phenomenon in it of itself. At some point it was just funny seeing the apparent shock in the doctors faces as they realized that he possessed a nearly equal if not greater knowledge to them, in their own profession! In recognition of the respect he earned from the judge's clerks, when he talked, they came to the back to watch!

I would be remiss if I referred anyone to another law firm. If I ever imagined a law firm: it was an aggregation of colonies living in infest symbiosis. These lawyers on the other hand, are lawyers one is to be proud of associating with, they represent the chivalry that would make Cicero and his peers proud. With respect to lawyers this is a group of the most respectable in their profession. The care and time I was given amount to an insurmountable personal debt I now owe. The personal relationship they have with each client; which I've personally witnessed, means the utmost interest and indulgence in each case. The way I see it: I can't imagine the outcome of my lawsuit had I used another firm - rather, I don't want to imagine it.
